

Basic Politics

The problem: Workers As Voters – Atomised.

Business People, Their Parties, Their Media – Organised.

Workers at Work - under-organised

Workers as Voters – under-organised

Business people and public employers – organised – control people at work, when not organised Business people are organised at work as businesses. And they are the economy, so they dominate governments. They have clear views on business people's class rights. They dominate political debate. Conservative parties represent them.

Divert people

Divide people

Confuse people

The Media – most of it Business-owned

Low inter-action between workers as voters. And in their key shared public role as workers.

Low level of collective, progressive, political views and voting.

Civilised politics and parties not strong enough. Overwhelmed, even in government.

How To Fix It

Workers Organised At Work

Confident In Their Right To Be Organised Dealing with Employers as one

Now equal at work to business owners & public service managers
And also now equal 'players' with them in the economy

Business people – the business class – and their conservative parties

Worker Majority Voting As Workers

The worker majority, organised together as workers, in unions, developing their own independent, collective, civilised politics.

Resistant to business class media

Civilised, progressive parties easily electable and able to govern confidently with mass voter backing

Business's media
